How to Survive the Collapse of Civilization!

What if the unthinkable happened? Could your family survive, even for a few weeks, without electricity... hospitals... water pumped in from miles away... and food trucked in from out of state?

- If terrorists succeed in attacking the U.S. power grid with an electromagnetic pulse (EMP) device, they could throw America into the dark ages in a split second.
- A new generation of drug-resistant "superbugs" could result in global epidemics that kill up to 100 million people.
- And as Hurricane Katrina proved, the Federal Government's ability to help during a national emergency is severely limited.

Find out what you can do to prepare to survive a terrorist strike... global epidemic... social unrest... or other serious disaster...

Dear Fellow American,

If there is one thing that gives America's security planners nightmares, it's the country's power grid.

That's because without electricity, virtually everything Americans depend upon for survival—food, water, heat, transportation and communications—would be threatened on a massive scale.

Yet experts warn that a single, split-second Electromagnetic Pulse (EMP) from a nuclear weapon or EMP-producing device would effectively "fry" the nation's delicate power grid and virtually all non-shielded electronic equipment within hundreds of miles.

The Implications are Horrific:

Without a large-scale invasion or even a nuclear war, parts of America could be thrown into the dark ages in an instant.

- No lights.
- No telephones.
- No Internet.
- No radio or television.

Even most vehicles would not start because of the electronic fuel-injection systems in most cars and trucks.

And That's Just For Starters! The Entire Financial System Would Also Collapse.

- ATM machines would not work.
- Banks would be shuttered.
- Grocery stores would soon be looted.
- Police would be paralyzed and helpless.

"If even a crude nuclear weapon were detonated anywhere between 40 kilometers to 400 kilometers above the earth, in a split-second it would generate an electro-magnetic pulse [EMP] that would cripple military and civilian communications, power, transportation, water, food and other infrastructure," said a report from the Commission to Assess the Threat to the United States from Electromagnetic Pulse (EMP) Attack, a blue-ribbon panel established by Congress in 2001.

Continued Below...

How to Survive a Nuclear Attack or Accident

Seek shelter immediately. If you are in the vicinity of a nuclear detonation or the accidental release of radiation, seek shelter immediately. The majority of people killed at Hiroshima did not die from the thermal blast but from radioactive particles in fall-out.

Stay underground for 48 hours. The deeper underground you can go, the safer you will be. Try to find a basement or subterranean garage with a concrete roof. Radioactive energy dissipates to 1/100th of its initial strength within 48 hours so stay in your temporary shelter for a minimum of two full days, longer if possible.

Take potassium iodide tablets. The thyroid gland has an unusual capacity to absorb large amounts of radiation, which can be fatal; but potassium iodide tablets, such as RadBlock, saturate the thyroid with non-radioactive iodine so that it cannot absorb radiation. Take these tablets as soon as you learn of a nuclear incident.

Mass Starvation, Looting Possible

One U.S. colonel was even more blunt: An EMP burst would result, he says, in "mass starvation because food deliveries cease, urban deaths by dehydration as water systems fail, collapse of medical systems, breakdown of police functions, ineffectiveness of firefighters, loss of bank records, inability to move physically other than by foot, and a return of America to a "pre-industrial age state."

Intelligence services fear that China and Korea (which already possess EMP capability) or Iran (which is actively pursuing it) could pass an EMP device to Al-Qaeda terrorists.

A primitive, medium-ranged rocket launched from an offshore freighter might be able to take an EMP device high enough to do the trick.

"In the opinion of many, it is not a matter of if we are attacked by EMP but when," says Lt. Col. Gordon Cucullu, a former special forces veteran and EMP expert. "America has a surfeit of capable enemies—communists, dictators and terrorists—and they form a deadly connection committed to our demise."

That's why I've pulled together the very latest survival information from top experts and compiled it into an all-new 21st Century Survival Guide that I'd like to send you. Its title is How to Survive the Collapse of Civilization.

In this eye-opening special report, you'll discover simple, practical strategies for coping with a world temporarily without electricity or effective police patrols.

I also want to warn you about...

The Continuing Threat of Dirty Bombs

Terrorism experts believe it's very likely that Islamic terrorists will successfully detonate a so-called "dirty" bomb—a conventional bomb that scatters radiological material—sometime in the near future.

The reason is largely technological.

Unlike an actual nuclear weapon, which requires precise engineering and access to enriched plutonium in order to split an atom, a dirty bomb can be made with ordinary explosives and radioactive materials.

Unfortunately, there are thousands of sources of non-weapons-grade radiological material, such as those used for medicine and in universities, available.

Most experts believe a dirty bomb's purpose is primarily psychological—that is, to terrify a population rather than to actually harm it. That's because tests have shown that radiation from a dirty bomb would be limited to a few city blocks, at most, and more people would be harmed from the explosives than by the radiation.

Nevertheless, if you live in an area in which a dirty bomb is detonated, you should take precautions such as swallowing potassium iodide pills and staying indoors.

If you're really worried about exposure to radiation, you can purchase an inexpensive credit-card-size radiation detector (called a dosimeter) that will let you know instantly the level of radiation in your immediate surroundings.

Learning to Survive "Off the Grid" Doesn't Mean Roughing It

The good news is that it's possible to survive without utility-provided electricity. Groups of independence-minded pioneers have been doing it, and quite comfortably, for years.

A number of companies sell "off-the-grid" products designed to provide all the modern conveniences without access to centrally provided power systems.

These include everything from old-fashioned wood stoves and oil lamps to state-of-the-art solar power systems and natural-gas-powered refrigerators and freezers.

Many of these products are surprisingly affordable—and offer people "back up" systems that don't rely upon government-provided energy.

What to Do When Food & Water are Expensive, Scarce or Unsafe!

In good times, most Americans don't give a thought to the nation's food distribution system: They simply assume that when they go to the grocery store they'll find plenty of healthy, inexpensive and safe food.

But as the global depression worsens and the possibility of a catastrophic terrorist attack still looms, that's a dangerous assumption to make.

The truth is, the U.S. food supply system is woefully unprepared for economic turmoil. The reliability and safety of U.S. food supplies are more threatened now than at any time in history.

Serious threats to the food supply come from the collapse of food inspection systems... the bankruptcy of U.S. agribusiness companies—and the breakdown of food distribution networks in the event of a massive terrorist attack or social unrest.

And it's no longer merely survivalists who are stockpiling food, either.

Last year, The Wall Street Journal's Brett Arends warned that "maybe it's time for Americans to start stockpiling food." He added, "No, this is not a drill."

In your copy of How to Survive the Collapse of Civilization, you'll learn practical steps you can take right now to protect your food and water in the event of economic collapse or terrorist attacks.

You'll discover...

- A list of inexpensive, "ordinary" foods that last for long periods of time and can be easily stored...
- When and how to treat water for storage...
- Why the "store what you normally eat" philosophy is too expensive for most people (and what to do instead)...
- The truth about pool water—and when you can (and cannot) use it for drinking water...
- How to feed an army on just $5 a day...
- The 7 most common mistakes people make when storing food...
- How to buy emergency food supplies at warehouse stores like Costco...
- Why every family should possess an emergency water purifier...
- How and when to buy freeze-dried or nitrogen-packed "survival" foods...
- How much food you will need to feed your family for three months to one year...
- What you need to know about dry canning—and why it makes sense for serious food storage...

- 19 ways to cut your food bill in half without compromising on quality and taste...
- How to raise chickens and enjoy limitless free eggs even in the suburbs...
- Why you should create a cache of emergency "survival seeds" that can last for four to five years...
- And lots MORE!

Create a "Victory Garden" To Lower Food Costs

Victory gardens, also called war gardens or food gardens for defense, were vegetable, fruit and herb gardens planted at private residences in the United States, Canada and United Kingdom during World War I and World War II to reduce the pressure on the public food supply brought on by the war effort. In 1943, Americans planted more than 20 million victory gardens.

Today, millions of Americans are starting small vegetable gardens as a way to ensure they have plenty of fresh, nutritious food in the event of a breakdown in food supply networks.

With a little planning, it's possible to create a family garden that produces enough food to feed an entire family. One family of "urban homesteaders" in Pasadena, California, living on a one-tenth of an acre lot, grows more than 6,000 pounds of organic fruits and vegetables a year.

Could You Get By Without Doctors and Hospitals?

If there was one thing that 2005's Hurricane Katrina taught America, it's the need for self-reliance in emergency situations—especially when it comes to medical care.

That's because, virtually overnight, this one hurricane eliminated many of the emergency services the people of New Orleans counted on in a crisis. Suddenly, people were without ambulance services, hospitals, even a doctor or nurse.

Two days after the hurricane hit, the Federal government declared a Public Health Emergency in the states of Alabama, Florida, Louisiana and Mississippi. Dozens of hospitals shut down. Thousands of incapacitated patients had to be evacuated.

The conditions in many medical facilities were horrific: No electricity... bodies stacked in stairwells... sweltering heat.

The citizens of New Orleans learned a hard lesson: In a wide-scale emergency, medical personnel often flee to care for their own families.

One emergency doctor recalled that all that could be done was to "provide the barest amount of comfort care." He added, "We practiced medical triage at its most basic, black-tagging the sickest people and [moving] them [away] from the masses so that they could die in a separate area."

That's why it's important you send for your copy of How to Survive the Collapse of Civilization.

In this eye-opening report, you'll learn the steps you can take right now to prepare yourself and your family, to survive without routine medical care, including...

- How to legally stockpile, store and rotate routine prescription medicines you need in case of a temporary collapse of medical services...
- Why you should consider taking a basic Red Cross First Aid or EMT course sooner rather than later...
- Essential step-by-step emergency medical guides, written for the layman, every home should have on hand...
- Why 90 percent of routine medical problems can be handled with a small amount of medical equipment and drugs...
- How to create a first-class emergency medical kit...
- The right way to acquire emergency medications, including

- antibiotics, from a friendly M.D. for emergency preparedness...
- How to easily buy emergency medical equipment such as stethoscopes, IV kits, sutures, syringes, needles and so on...
- Dental survival supplies that everyone should stock in their emergency medical survival locker...
- Lists of essential antibiotic, cardiovascular, analgesic, respiratory, anti-allergic and other drugs you should quietly and systematically obtain with your physician's permission...
- An explanation of the four basic types of bacteria—and the antibiotics used to combat them...
- Simple emergency testing kits you should have on hand...
- What to do if someone dies during an extended emergency situation...
- How to cope with disease epidemics...
- Essential nutritional supplements that will keep you healthy and strong so you won't need medical treatment in an emergency...
- And lots MORE!

Saving Someone's Life from Dehydration

One of the greatest tragedies of survival medicine is dehydration: that's because severe dehydration can often be fatal and yet it is one thing that trained medical personnel can easily treat. As a result, the layman without a doctor or hospital available must learn how to cope with dehydration.

Severe dehydration can be recognized by dry skin and eyes, no sweating or urination, sunken eyes, fever, rapid heartbeat and low blood pressure. The secret is tiny amounts of fluid frequently. In an emergency, and assuming a patient can drink, you can make your own oral rehydration solution by mixing 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/2 teaspoon baking soda, 3 tablespoons sugar and 1 liter (about 1 quart) of safe drinking water.

If a patient is unconscious and you do not have (or know how to use) an IV drip, you can use a simple field technique for providing emergency hydration to an unconscious person. Known as rectal fluid resuscitation, it involves carefully inserting a thin plastic tube in the patient's rectum and then slowly dripping about 8 ounces of fluid (a cup) over a period of 15 to 20 minutes. This can be repeated every four hours. In the right circumstances, it can save someone's life.

The Ultimate Terrorist Weapon: Smallpox!

Smallpox is a highly contagious, extremely lethal disease that killed between 300 million and 500 million people in the 20th century—five times more than all the people killed in all the wars of the past 100 years. Its eradication through a global vaccination campaign was one of the triumphs of modern medicine.

The last known case occurred in 1978—and it is considered to be the only human disease to have been completely eradicated.

Or has it?

The only known samples of the living virus are allegedly found in two heavily guarded laboratories—one in the U.S. and one in Russia.

However, if Islamic terrorists somehow acquired smallpox virus—perhaps through contacts in the Russian mafia—they could develop a biological weapon that would deliver a devastating blow.

One reason: While most Americans born before 1970 have been vaccinated against smallpox, the vaccine only lasts for five years! With the exception of some 650,000 U.S. soldiers, most young Americans have not been vaccinated at all and remain totally vulnerable to exposure...

"An attack using smallpox is a very real possibility, and the problem is that only a handful of countries in the world have enough adequate supplies for their own people," said Randall Larsen, senior adviser to the Center of BioSecurity in the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center.

In your copy of How to Survive the Collapse of Civilization, you'll discover practical ways you can prevent becoming a victim of bioterrorism or deadly new epidemic diseases. You'll discover...

A Global Flu Pandemic is a Real Threat, Say Experts!

Everyone is worried about the recent outbreak of swine flu—and with good reason.

At this writing, over 90,000 people have been infected with H1N1 flu virus in 74 countries—from New Zealand to Nova Scotia.

And although this outbreak of swine flu has proven to be less deadly than originally predicted, flu strains frequently mutate and can be unpredictable.

The World Health Organization (WHO) now says "the emergence of an inherently more virulent virus during the course of a pandemic can never be ruled out."

What REALLY worries experts is that a mutated form of the swine flu virus could spread far more rapidly—and infect entire populations in a matter of weeks. And if that happens, the U.S. government will be woefully unprepared to cope.

The 1918 flu epidemic started out rather mild and returned in six months in a much more deadly form killing 500,000 Americans and an estimated 100 million people worldwide. Fifty years later, in 1968, another epidemic of the "Asian flu" killed 700,000 people worldwide.

"The pandemic threat is real and continuing, irrespective of how much the perception of the threat may wax or wane over time," said William Raub, who advises the U.S. government on pandemic preparedness.

Experts warn that swine flu—or a new drug-resistant infectious disease—could potentially kill thousands, perhaps millions. Find out what you can do to protect your family from epidemic disease—or biological terrorism!
